This webinar will explore Dr. Gray's successful implementation of a community-based crisis team model in rural communities in Oklahoma, as well as her current ongoing efforts in other locations. She will discuss topics such as steps to create a local crisis team, how and why to involve community members in the creation and implementation phases, and identifying strengths and barriers in your community. Dr. Gray will draw on her decades of experience working with tribes and rural communities in various regions across the United States and abroad.

Learning Objectives:

- Recognize crisis needs in your community
- Identify at least 3 local resources
- List steps for putting together a recovery crisis team

Presenter: Dr. Jacque Gray, a Choctaw/Cherokee research associate professor and Associate Director at the Center for Rural Health at the University of North Dakota. She is also the director of the National IndigenousElder Justice Initiative (NIEJI). NIEJI has been funded since the fall of 2011 to address the issues of Elder Abuse in Indian Country. Dr. Gray has worked addressing health, mental health, crisis intervention, and health disparities across Indian Country, and internationally working with Māori suicide prevention. Dr. Gray has worked with tribes across the U.S. for over 30 years.

She received her doctorate from Oklahoma State University in 1998 and has been at the University of North Dakota since 1999.
