"How do we create Social Change?"

Julie Burroughs Erdman

"Julie Burroughs Erdman, NYSCPS, is a human rights advocate who has been supporting people in community mental health for more than twenty years. Diagnosed with Bipolar disorder in 1992, her long journey is characterized by cycles of high achievement and interfering crises. She believes that her experiences embody the cycles of birth, death and rebirth that are common for all, and that regardless of mental health diagnoses, all people endure pain, a common denominator for all living creatures. Power structures that house racism, sexism, classism, heterosexism, and ableism are artificial constructs, also subject to cycles of death and rebirth, and that it on us to rebuild a substantive society that reflects our shared humanity. Julie is a creative person: she is a published author and performer. She is a project leader, having headed up the artistic expression group, Creative Explorations, and continues to organize communities around social change. Currently, Julie is a Master of Social Work Candidate at the Stony Brook School of Social Welfare and an HCBS Counselor working for Federation of Organizations."
